Apologies I could not get on the site earlier today and consequently I am late and doing this by email.

The comment I wanted to submit is:

The availability of light into a property has a very significant impact on health and wellbeing. The new design led approach to density will need to require a minimum level of day and sunlight to ensure a healthy environment is achieved. BRE guidance is only guidance and like minimum unit sizes needs to be specified in the London Plan if it is to drive quality in high density developments.

Thank you
Kind regards
