1.2.5 I am particularly concerned at the goal of "intensification of existing places. Brownfield sites & public land are obvious targets, but I am alarmed at the prospect of widespread backland development & its impact on stable and long settled suburban areas, particularly linked to the adoption of high rise apartments.

B I really fail to understand what "Proactively explore the potential to intensify land use ..." means & how it will be undertaken. Who are the wise men (women) who are going to survey the wide area of London? And as for timing do we have to wait for bus services to be upgraded before any such survey goes ahead?

C It is suggested you determine what is valued about existing places & then use this as a catalyst for for growth and place-making. Surely that is a good way to disrupt and undermine a settled area that works & will be putting what is good for existing residents at risk..

D Of course we want tom be assured that potential impacts and development proposals on health and wellbeing are addressed. A shame these guidelines were not effectively done on the Bowes Road section of the A406 where we have unacceptable air quality now that the upgraded road attracts more & more vehicles & more & more pollutants.

D Of course we want potential impacts of development on health to be assessed. A shame this was not well done when the A 406 was upgraded on the Bowes Road section. We now have more traffic, which impacts the community as it tries to get around, and has increased pollution levels.

I had part completed my comments on the New London Plan, but had to log off so I submitted comments as far as I had got. Now, I can find no way to add my final comments:

- CG4:
  - Establishing ambitious build rates is all very well, but giving local councils unrealistic annual targets is not going to help.
- CG6:
  - A: The target of 2050 to make London a carbon free city needs to be brought forward.
  - D: Ensuring that public, private, community & volunteers work together - I have no faith in this at all. Currently, consultation in my area is a farce. Meetings are held, the public make observations & give suggestions, then officers go away & ignore what was suggested. So, I am VERY sceptical.
