May I offer the following comment on GG3 - 1.3.3

Consider standardising local council policy to allow householders in conservation areas across London to replace inefficient single glazed windows with like design and construction conservation grade double glazed windows. At the moment, as I understand it, some councils allow this, many do not.

In any event, such a policy would allow householders who find themselves in conservation areas to benefit from reduced heating bills and energy efficiency. Such a policy would also spawn new small craft-based businesses.

After all, buildings of genuine historical interest are well protected by the Listing system. There can surely be no need with today's skills and techniques to also trap householders in conservation areas in the inefficiencies engendered by historical aspic.

Thank you for your consideration.

Regards

Chris Parkinson
