

[REDACTED]

From: Evelyn Ryan [REDACTED]
Sent: 01 March 2018 22:00
To: Londonplan
Subject: Draft New London Plan!

Follow Up Flag: Follow up
Flag Status: Completed

Dear Planning team

I would like you to consider the following points when compiling planning policies around health and particularly around land owned and used by the NHS.

If possible, the London Plan should include policies to restrict the sale/use of NHS land and I should be grateful if you would take the following points into consideration when preparing those policies:

I am concerned at the damage that would be done to the NHS estate, and to the contribution of planning to London, if any sale of NHS land in London takes place before a strategic framework is in place that has been subject to meaningful public consultation

There are several options that provide better value for money, and more public benefit, as well as housing gain, than a straight sale of NHS land.

When any NHS land is identified as not being in clinical use, the Mayor should encourage the NHS to adopt a sequential test to appraise the use options for the land.

Buildings currently in clinical use - The useful life of a healthcare building today is often as short as 30 years. Furthermore, clinical services change frequently, driving frequent internal reorganisation within buildings. Where there is a backlog of maintenance, it will be important in each case to consider, first, whether there is a business case for carrying out that maintenance. This must be compared with a business case for renovating, adapting or even replacing the building. Until these determinations are known, there can be no responsible decision to sell any NHS land that is available for this purpose.

Expansion, replacement, and new facilities - Where the NHS owns land that is convenient for expansion and replacement of facilities, this should be retained.

Step-down care - Experts consider that it is bad value for money for the government to sell NHS land for private house-building when such land, much of it co-located with hospitals, or in their vicinity could be used for "step-down" care to relieve acute beds.

Residential units for NHS staff - Building co-located residential units for NHS staff mitigates many problems in a single sweep, e.g. staff located near to work will be housed locally in good quality housing allowing them time to rest rather than commute and would be a big selling point when recruiting NHS staff.

Land swaps with other public-sector land - The Mayor should encourage the NHS not to dispose of land until it has been considered for other public uses by all local stakeholders.

No unsuitable developments on former NHS land near hospitals - If, at the end of this sequential test, there is a case for selling any NHS site into the private sector, then the Mayor should favour a planning policy that prevents any type of development that would be unsuitable near any hospital.

Kind regards,

Evelyn Ryan [REDACTED]

This message has been scanned for viruses by the Greater London Authority.

Click here to report this email as spam.